Friends of Seedtime,

There are no soft rocks, said Frantz.

I know life is hard, but the rocks are hard everywhere.
There are no soft rocks.
Then he said he believes that in any circumstance,
God can make a way.

They're easy words to say... like Sunday school answers.

But Frantz is not "living the dream" on easy street.
He's living in Haiti in a home without electricity, outside of his solar panel, and without water, outside of that which drops from the sky or is carried to his house by buckets.

His rocks are indeed hard, to the point that no one
we know is lining up to trade places with him.

Yet he routinely is the inspirational voice in the room.

I find my strength and motivation by setting a goal for each day but I can't do it without God. I read and pray a lot so God can lead me in the best way.

God provides and always provided. I put all my faith in him. Not my will but God's will is leading me and encourage me.

That doesn't mean I not suffer but I find peace and joy in my Lord.

He is tested daily. We are confident to say his faith is strong. His attitude is very good. His words inspire the northwest of Haiti as FM radio invitations continue to roll in.

His life in Haiti at the moment has revolved around the recent birth of his daughter, Jade. Everyone in the family is doing okay but his wife is still recovering. And since most everything in his world is manually accomplished,
his to-do list is impossibly long.

So, except for a single discipleship class this Sunday afternoon and a few timeslots on FM Radio, Seedtime in Haiti, is a bit quiet at the moment.

Nevertheless, we are blessed to see him work hard,
focused on leading his family and his people.

Your prayers and support for Frantz and Seedtime are requested.

The one who calls you is faithful, and he will do it.

We think Frantz gets these.
At the least he seems to live them.
And we like seeing him
teach others.

Thanks for giving, and for praying!
